OPEN THE GATES:

The Board of Education, at its meeting next Wednesday, will announce what it intends to do in regard to opening the school gates earlier than is now done, in order that the children may not stand waiting on the street.

It seems impossible that the school authorities can deliberately refuse to open the school gates after a proper consideration of the point. It is too clearly to the advantage of the children in every respect and so greatly to their advantage that it is hard to see how anything can be brought up as a sufficient offset to their claim.

It is crucial to keep young children waiting at the locked gates. Their delicate constitutions can so easily be impaired by the cold or the wet, to both of which they are exposed by this long vigil. The season is rapidly settling into steadily cool weather, and these children are frequently too poor to be properly protected against it by warm clothing. So the point cannot be settled too soon.

These are not fictitious or exaggerated evils. They are simple facts. The city in undertaking to educate these young children necessarily assumes the care of them during the hours of instruction. Is it fidelity to this duty to force them to shiver at the gates and be exposed to such danger as young unguarded children are open to on the streets?

It does not seem as if any sufficient reason could be proposed to the Board of Education which should lead to an adverse decision on this point.

A young man of independent income and successful business position blew out his brains yesterday at his club-house.

The only reason that has been assigned for the act is that of ill health or disgust of life. Such a self-destruction has more than the wretched horror of suicide in it. With everything apparently to make life pleasant he found it inauditable, and fittingly left it, suited in evening dress. It was a melancholy commentary on the lack of motive for fortitude in this Nineteenth Century.

The President reached Indianapolis early Sunday morning. He attended church and shook hands with people in front of the sacred edifice. Then he went home to dinner, and in the afternoon shook hands again with many callers. Altogether it was a quiet effective day for Sunday, and the sleek little silver-haired President rather scored a point by going to church. There are people who regard it almost as a beautiful act of lowly condescension in a President to go to church.

Col. ELLIOTT F. SHEPARD has managed to make himself considerably feared at the White House and by the prominent Republicans at Washington. The Colonel is an envious terrible to his own. He will talk, and everybody fears, with beautifully well-grounded apprehension, that the Colonel cannot talk much without muddling things up. He is no longer invited to dinner at the White House. The President sighs at him.

Savior, the king of racers, will be withdrawn from the race-course and taken to California to be retired to the stud. The superb thoroughbred has had a brilliant career and may perpetuate his glories by sires of his get. He has done enough for his fame already.

Yesterday a young gentleman made his debut in life at the Korean Legion in Washington. He is the first native-born Korean. Hope the young man will like America.

POLITICAL ECHOES

Ex-Judge Gunning S. Bedford, who was not named for District Attorney on the fusion ticket, has been removed from the County Democratic ticket and announced his intention of supporting Tammany's nominees.

John E. Brodsky may be induced to forgive his intention of putting a straight Republican ticket in the field because ex-Police Justice James H. Patterson is not a candidate on the Fusion ticket. Brodsky was left a legacy of revenge by the late John J. O'Brien, and Patterson is its object.

Now that the nominations are all in Col. Feltus will, perhaps, be less prominent in the election of celebrated cases in the general session.

John J. Moran is listed as the County Democratic candidate for Assembly in the Sixteenth District.

Several office-holders in the Custom-House who owe their positions to the influence of "Wicked" Fred Gilpin, begin to feel that their term of office is misery. Several others have been discharged recently for "lack of appointment."

Colonel Justice Powers' view of foreign influence is a rosé one. He predicts a victory for the Republicans by 20,000 majority.

Twenty-four of the twenty-eight election districts in the city of New York, the District County Boundary organization, are said to be stamping with Joseph E. Newell, and it will be difficult for the veteran leader to prevent them from supporting the Tammany ticket.

Veteran friends declare that the labor demonstration against John J. Gorman, a County Hall's candidate for sheriff, will be offset by the support of the old tailors who "read and recite" in the days of the Volunteer Department.

THE WAYS OF WOMAN FAIR.

Fads, Fancies and Fashions That Delight the Gentler Sex.

The Way to Make Cheap Cookery Savory—The Pay of School Teachers—A Social Attack on the Ubiquitous I—Crazes in Words.

Miss Caroline Wilkinson who died in Atlanta Ga., recently was engaged to Alice H. Stephens for forty years his ill-health preventing their union. The devotion of Miss Wilkinson has no parallel in these days of cold-heartedness.

Miss Dorothy Trinder, a new American artist for comic opera houses, has just returned from Paris. She tells a very amusing story of her experiences with Mme. Marcelline, the well-known voice cultivator, said Miss Trinder: "The first time I went to see her she declined to talk. 'I am very tired, my dear,' she said, 'and I must have an drive.' The second time I called she declared that she was going to a luncheon, and the third time I went I had an unsatisfactory interview.

Based on Adam's Experience.
To the Editor. INTRODUCTION.

Verse appeals to the reader more strongly than prose. For the lines being shorter, the quicker it is to prove, the more easily the words being selected, he runs to the end at a pretty good canter!

THE MATTER IN HAND.

Now take, for example, that old case of Adam's Experience:

Experiences he of a meny had 'em,
In the oily old matrimonial yearn'—
And tell nobodie's he a "one man" at the Twa, he who came first it is positively reasoned.

His wife, as is always the way, coming second, The end of this logic will go without saying.

For he's had all these asses-a-bray-day?

Adam than Eve had on follow the sense (?)
Fully four hour more of experience!

Adam's Experience is something appealing the matter When man looks up to his wife, stead of at her, he can't look up (intellectually sim) So sure will she have to look down upon him!

No, there is a wife who is on my own level! The rest of the world then can go to the devil!

Be her size what it may, therell be no comparison.

In a Green Old Age.

If women live longer than men, as it is generally conceded that they do, the human should not be more than five years older than the wife.

It is a pleasant sight to see a happy old couple journeying toger' her down the hill in life, cheerfully bearing one another's burdens, casting aside one another's by-words and dialects, and sharing their labors, pinches & a higher opinion of their race, while demonstrating that marriage is not always a failure.

How wistfully they are regarded by the lonely, sad-faced women who find themselves in the same position as the wife of the son of life. Their children may be disposed to be kind, but they have partners of their own and interests in which their mothers have, but little si are: and they are thankful, if dependent, that their wives are not as bad as they are.

Miss Annie Wood, who has a niece, Miss Jeannette Wood, who had just arrived from England to make a home in America, is not entirely without hope. Her mother is a maid to two selfish sons and a daughter-in-law, who "have no room in the house because there is none in the heart."

At best they cannot feel the sweet content of the aged wife. They stand about at the time when women love their husbands most and have the greatest need of their care and companionship. A. M. S.

"Old Maid" Agrees with "Bach."

Like "Bach," being of a singular frame of mind, the question of wedlock is to me personally non-interesting. How it happened in married life would be natural in any other case but that by mutual love, respect, etc. of the principals surpasses my comprehension.

Without love it seems to me that marriage would be on a par with that "very where papa is." Cupid sends his darts where he lists.

Age has nothing to do with the matter. Love and love only should influence a man or woman in the choice of a life companion.

He who loves a woman truly in his notwithstanding his youth, thinks of no such trifles as a redundancy of years to either his own or his sweetheart's age.

This from a predestined old maid.

FRANCES.

A Happy Woman's Theory.

If a woman is to honor and respect her husband he ought to be her superior, and to believe his wife to be the loveliest and best of women. If such a couple have another, no matter what their age may be, in marriage happiness is theirs.

The Question's Practical Side.

Among the practical things of wedded life to be considered are the ages of husband and wife. Nobody denies that it is the part of wisdom for a woman to choose a mate several years her senior. The average girl who marries stays at home and makes a rearing for her husband and children.

The man goes out into the world and has the responsibility of caring for those at home, and yet this does not set his soul on him as it does on a woman. The little care of life he has had until too often makes him a weakling.

A woman even proportionately grows older in appearance sooner than a man, and for that reason she wants to be the height of the doubt and let him have the added years to stay with.

WORLWINGS.

The chancery crop in Virginia is unusually large this season. In Patrick County it is immense, and every train from Stuart for the last thirty days has had from one to three carloads of chestnuts.

Queen Margherita, of Italy, has a passion for chestnuts, and she wears strings upon strings of them around her neck. Melancholic tonics while she wears them.

A west friend in the Pennsylvania River by Elmira, N.Y., was sold by him for $100,000. He had bought a New York jeweler.

James Blaskey is reported to smoke sixty cigarettes a day. They are filled with the choicest Turkish tobacco.

Brewers will not attend the matinee of "Lesbia," because their object to less beer.

Bach and Paganini are alike when they die. This is to say, when Bach dies he will be buried in the crypts of the clever houses of the Faustine Athletic Club, a roomy-faced fellow, who is a safe repository of his love affairs. His weight about 120 pounds when his best.

Women hate wearing things, unless they wear the things themselves and they are made.

The playright is not so democratic as to object to royalties.

Now, why wouldn't a "Fairer Match" be a good play for John L. Sullivan?

Naturally a group that goes round cannot be on the square all the time.

The handbag business that Frank & Co. started in Paris is to avoid the increase in duties by using a new name, "Le Sac des Femmes," instead of "Le Sac des Femmes."

Should husband and wife be near the same age, or should the wife be much younger?

Miss Elinor Buckingham, a senior of the Harvard Annex, has been appointed an instructor in the Royal Normal College for the Blind at London.

At the late exhibition of the work of the professional photographers of the United States, which was open to amateurs as well, Miss Catharine Wood Barnes, a granddaughter of Thurloe Wood, and an accomplished student of photography, exhibited three pictures, which were pronounced by the judges to be fully entitled to second place, though the collection contained specimens of the skill of the best professional craftsmen.

An attack, a social attack, is on the part of the aged and ubiquitous I. The student of culture does not use it either in speech or note, and some very nice discrimination and rhetorical forcefulness is required in the graceful turning of sentences.

There are crazes in words as well as in wearing apparel. Just now differentiation in the choicest polysyllabic in the vocabulary of fashion. Its origin is not in Commonwealth Avenue of Boston, but Bush Street, Chicago.

Mrs. Burnett is said to stand at the head of our authors just now in her literary range. The London Daily News says that she has received for her American rights on the play of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," no less than $17,000 ($5,000, £1,000), and that we will add to her similar profits in England. She is to be congratulated on her success.

Miss Amy Wood, who has just arrived from England, is the most popular actress in the country. She has been engaged by the McCall Comic Opera Company and has been engaged by the Princeton University for $1,000 a week for her services.
